

Origin

As far as we know today, the Lanners are a purely Luxembourg family that has its origins in Holzthum in the Oesling in the Northern part of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg.

First document

The name is mentioned for the first time ever in a baptism record entered March 30th, 1679 by pastor Johan Brauners in the register of baptisms of the parish of Consthum :

Comment:

- The letters at the beginning of the record are JB, the first letters of the pastor's name and a kind of initials. The S at the end is an abbreviation of "solvit", Latin for "has payed".
- This inscription relates a birth, not the baptism which is usually referred to in church records and which had of course been administered by pastor Brauners.
- The vocabulary is old German, although some words are still used today even in Luxembourgish, like "Klesgen" for Santa Claus and "Petter" and "Giedel" for the godparents.

- It can be assumed that John James was the eldest son of Klesgen (although we don't know for certain as the parish register for baptisms, marriages and deaths started only in 1677), which might have been the reason for the choice of the Schuttbourg administrator as a godfather and confirms the fact that the family lived on Schuttbourg castle's farm in Holzthum. As a matter of fact, a child was given in those days always the name of his godfather or godmother.

The farm in Holzthum on which John James Lanners was born has disappeared as the site has been transformed and rebuilt during the three centuries elapsed since his birth, but we know where it stood: it is the place with the house left to the church. In 1801, a member of the de Hoefnagle family that owned the Schuttbourg at that time, Albert Joseph de Hofnagle from Bastogne, bought the farm and came to live here with his family. Two of his daughters married local men, among them Félicité who became the husband of Jean Wagner in 1813. Félicité de Hoefnagle is an ancestor of today's owner, Anne Thiellen.
